

Carey Cox

The Columbus Daily Enquirer Sun (Columbus, GA); 22 September 1876; pg. 2 col. 4

NOTE: Carey's death was mentioned as an afterthought in a news article about the recent yellow fever outbreak encompassing several counties in Georgia. Near the end of the article was a communication from the Telegraph Messenger that read as follows:

The Telegraph-Messenger says: The disease is spreading all over the city, but the mortality is comparatively small. From Monday until Thursday evening only three deaths from the fever were reported. Cary W. Cox, well known in this city, died yesterday. The other two were a sailor and a child.
